Dear Mr Dowding

You said in a letter dated 12 November that you had passed my letter of 30 October to the Home Office, on Mr Blair's instructions, stating that the subject I raised was their responsibility. I have two misgivings about this.

Firstly, the Home Office have been very slow in getting to the point.

Secondly, my understanding is that the intelligence services, which are the most likely culprits in any abuse of the technology under discussion, don't come under the Home Office, but rather they report directly to the Prime Minister. Is this not so?

Yours sincerely,

John Allman
