

Introduction

Founded in the UK, Christians Against Mental Slavery is now an international political pressure group, of bible believing Christians who believe that monitoring or influencing the thoughts of other people technologically, without their continuing, informed consent, should be declared a crime against humanity worldwide. We present well-researched scientific evidence that this sort of interference with people's minds has already become technologically feasible. We engage in peaceful political action, in an attempt to get such interference outlawed all over the world.

Paragraph 27 of European Parliament Resolution A4-0005/99 calls for a worldwide ban on weapons for the "manipulation of human beings". It is disappointing that nothing seems to have happened so far in response to this. The present British government does not deny that its intelligence services possess technology for monitoring and influencing human thought, such as what the US military calls "V2K" weapons. The British government's position is that the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 provides adequate safeguards, so the government doesn't want this change. The same government also admits that the Investigatory Powers Tribunal set up by the Act has never upheld a complaint, of this or any other kind.

The group's members are listed on each of the group's multiple websites. All have all signed their agreement with the group's common political agenda, and all have the same Christian beliefs. However, we gladly already collaborate with other politically likeminded groups and individuals across the world, many of different religious persuasions or none. There are plenty of purely humanitarian reasons for you, even if you do not believe in the same God as we do (or in any god), still to express solidarity with us politically. The monitoring and the influence of a targeted individual's thought, both at the same time, enables the most terrible technique for the oppression of human rights to be fashioned – maybe your human rights one day, or your children's or grandchildren's.

Perhaps the name of our group reminds you of William Wilberforce MP and the movement to abolish the Atlantic slave trade. This is intentional. I am confident that we have identified what must become the number one new political issue of the 21st century, widely to become regarded as every bit as important in our day as Wilberforce's struggle against the slavery he fought was back in the 19th century.

If I had been more "bible believing" when I first discovered that it had become feasible nowadays to monitor and influence human thought technologically, I might not have been as surprised as I was. The deniable human rights abuses technologically feasible nowadays for the first time in human history were predicted in the bible, almost two thousand years ago!

A handwritten signature in blue ink that reads "J. Allman." with a horizontal line underneath the name.

John Allman